THE THEATERS

Eugene Walter in his dramatization of John Fox Jr.'s "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" has the heroine, June, meet the hero, Jack Hale, at the rise of the curtain in the shadow of the great whispering pine, nature's motif of a forest melody, an idea which runs through the play like a sonorous theme in a Wagnerian score. A magnificent setting is made for this act, towering trees, clumps of rhododendron, and the water falling from heights into a pulsing brook. The barefooted character of June fore-shadows from the first and greatest of all the miracles of girlhood—the dawn of love and awakening of true womanhood. The clever dramatist lends a shadow of jealousy which are ably portrayed.

The Bijou will have the banner Saturday show today, a Kaleid showing scenes, thrilling ones, in Wall Street; and a Lubin western with Ed Jones in the lead. This one is pronounced to be the best Jones picture made to date. The Sells is a real western thriller. If you want action, don't fail to visit the Bijou today.

PROTEST

Is Aroused in London over the Wholesale Use of
"Millionaire."

LONDON, May 10.—The habit of English newspapers of dubbing every American who, for any reason, worthy or unworthy, is considered worth headlines, "An American Millionaire," has at last aroused a protest from American living in England.

The habit was never better exemplified than in a recent case of the disappearance in London of an American visitor. Every paper in London and most of those in the country came out with big headlines, in every one of which the words "American" and "millionaire" were conspicuous. News agencies are constantly sending out stories of the adventures of "American Millionaires" who, upon investigation, prove to be some one whose name is not known outside his own home town, and who had in all probability saved for years the few dollars that enabled him to come over to England.

This habit of the English has its inconveniences for Americans traveling or living in the country. There are always two prices at the hotels and other places for the "rich" Americans and touring Englishmen. This is what aroused the protest of an American living in the country. He prayed the papers to stop it, saying he found his cost of living very much greater than his English neighbor.

The man who has the greatest grievance, however, is the Englishman who has married an American "heiress," so-called. His name goes into a list of foreigners who had married fortunes in America, and was duly published in England. He now explains in a letter to the papers that his wife did not bring him a fortune, and that the prevailing belief in her great wealth is causing them great embarrassment, not the least of which is found in the constant stream of demands from the needy.

DOCKS

And Other Port Improvements in Canada Are Contemplated.

LONDON, May 10.—The secret of the retirement of Sir Percy Grouard from the imperial service to join the board of directors of the great shipbuilding firm of Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth and Company, is out.

Sir Percy is a Canadian by birth, and he is about to return to the Dominion to advise on the suitability of certain Canadian ports for the construction of docks and other engineering works in connection with future shipbuilding. He will also consult with the Dominion ministers in regard to the dry docks to be built at Halifax, Quebec and Esquimaux. It is understood that the private tenders for these docks having proved unsatisfactory, the Canadian government has decided to build them itself.

Sir Percy Grouard was born in Montreal. He joined the Royal Engineers, and, making railways construction a specialty, rendered splendid service to Great Britain in Egypt and South Africa. He built the railway which took Kitchener to Khartoum; reorganized the Egyptian railways, and when Kitchener went to South Africa to conclude the South African war, he immediately sent for the French-Canadian, who became commissioner of railways in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies, rebuilding what had been destroyed during the war. A few years in Nigeria and East Africa as chief of the administration of those colonies, and Sir Percy resigned to go into the shipbuilding business.

His withdrawal from the government service gave rise to a controversy as to whether the imperial government paid its servants sufficient to retain them when big salaries were offered by private concerns. Many a man who would have rendered invaluable service to the country has been attracted by the salaries offered in private life, and most of the big shipbuilding yards, and other engineering works are now headed by former officers of the navy and army.

No Merchant Can Do Business on a Small Per-Sale Profit, Unless He Makes a Great Many Sales

And no merchant ever makes a large volume of sales unless he does a lot of effective newspaper advertising. This absolute law of business makes it a matter of self-interest for you to buy at the well-advertised store, where fixed expenses do not have to be earned from a small number of daily sales, but from a great many!

If you are one of a hundred people to pay a dollar, your share is less than if you are one of ten on whom the dollar of profit is assessed!
